Fluor Hanford gains seat on national safety policy advisory board

Richland, Wash.— Fluor Hanford's director of Occupational Safety & Health will advise the Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) on setting national policy from a seat on the board of a nationwide workplace safety organization.

"This is an opportunity for Fluor Hanford to have status and recognition nationally, and for the Fluor Corporation to have a presence and influence in setting national policies that promote worker safety," said Dave Jackson, recently elected to a newly established board position with the Voluntary Protection Program Participants Association.

Jackson represents the Department of Energy arm of the Voluntary Protection Program and will serve on the National Legislative and Regulatory Committee that meets with OSHA to establish policy.

A nationwide worker safety program overseen by OSHA and the DOE, the Voluntary Protection Program includes member organizations at more than 1,000 U.S. worksites and approximately one million participating workers. To gain acceptance to the program, companies must demonstrate that their safety and health programs exceed OSHA requirements and that they have established partnerships with labor and regulatory agencies.
